

LAW & JUSTICE ESSAY PRIZE FOR TERTIARY STUDENTS

The Law Foundation of South Australia was incorporated in 1985.

The objects and purposes of the Foundation include:

- (i) the promotion or undertaking of legal research which in the opinion of the Foundation may be of value in the reform of law;
- (ii) the publication of materials relating to, resulting from or connected with carrying out the objects of the Foundation.

On an annual basis, The Law Foundation of South Australia invites tertiary students to submit essays of between 2,000 and 4,000 words, exploring issues relating to law and justice. The Essay Prize will be awarded to sole authors only, with applications closing on 31 March each year. Papers will be judged by a Panel of four – one each nominated by the Law Schools of The Adelaide University, Flinders University and the University of South Australia, and one nominated by the Executive Committee of the Law Foundation.

Formal criteria for evaluation

Essays will be evaluated against the following criteria:

- (a) Structure: taking into account such factors as logical organisation; clarity of approach; use of sections and headings; flow of argument; internal consistency, etc.
- (b) Research: taking into account factors such as finding and using relevant primary authorities and secondary literature, including judgments and legislation, journal articles and scholarly treatises; avoiding the use of authorities that lack appropriate weight; updating and currency of sources relied upon; use of comparative materials where appropriate, etc.
- (c) Coherence of argument: taking into account factors such as statement and focus upon a clear topic; identification of relevant questions or themes; situation of arguments within an appropriate framework and context; sustaining of arguments throughout the essay; use of proper legal reasoning methodology taking into account relevant judicial hierarchies and weight of authorities; reliance upon appropriate analogies; drawing upon developments in other jurisdictions; extent to which arguments are persuasive and convincing; relating of arguments and discussion to central themes; intellectual rigour and depth evidenced, etc.

- (d) Expression: taking into account factors such as use of clear, precise and concise language; correct use of language; avoidance of jargon; writing in a readable style that assists comprehension; adherence to correct spelling and grammatical norms; adherence to accepted scholarly conventions relating to acknowledgement of sources, referencing and citation practices; absence of typographical and similar errors; polish, etc.

Originality, in the sense of novelty or argument, approach, analysis and so forth, will not be an essential criterion in the evaluation of the relevant merit of essays submitted for the Prize. However, it may be relied upon as a distinguishing factor in the case of essays that, based upon the above four general criteria, are judged to be of relatively similar merit.
